- Make sure you stretch particularly the hip flexors and calves after every walk.
- Distances should follow in order. The point is to build up the mileage and then taper it back down in time for race day – you never actually complete the full distance (25km) in training.
- Avoid training walks on consecutive days.
- Keep a good brisk pace. To improve your overall fitness, play around with your walking pace by (for example) speeding up for 1km followed by a slower relaxed pace for the next 0.5km and then fast again for the next 1km etc.
- Try to take the longest walk of the week on the same day of the week that the race will be taking place.
- Make sure you train in the trainers or walking shoes you'll be competing in. You'll want to wear them in before race day to avoid blisters.
- Make sure you've walked a long distance in the outfit you plan to wear on race day too.
